2) A "Video Editor" tool. Yes, it is very very basic but it can be useful in resizing, editing and outputting. It doesn't work with all formats and it can only output 720p. It takes a lot of coding to make it fit in with the OS, though. 3) The latest versions of Directshow Filters do not work with the old DirectShow API. 4) I've tried to load VFW 7 into the FastViewer but it didn't seem to work. -- if you want to do more in the Windows Media format you need to invest in an expensive product such as DS9000 or Xilisoft Media Server. I was quite surprised to read that your "best" Windows media player is also from Silversmith. Although I never use Silverlight for anything, their player was a lot better than this one. I just wondered if you could use a Windows media player to preview the files before you convert? I had done the same thing (interviewing customers for a day) and one of them gave me a media player to check their WMA's with and it seemed ok, even on a nix box, but my first impression on the player was that it was very slow. Hi Gunka, I used to use a Mac Mini for that. I've not used it in a while so can't remember exactly what I did with it - but the process would be similar to Windows, just less robust. 1. Let the file path and file extension be selected by you. 2. Go to the media player and load the file. If you can't, select Open from within the file browser. 3. It should display a play/pause, volume and stop button. Click on the little arrow button. 4. The Windows Media Player will start to load the file. After it's loaded, click on the little arrow button on the top right of the screen. You will see that it says "waiting for the file to load". Wait for a couple of seconds, and it will start. 5. As the file loads, the first thing you'll see is a progress bar. You can't pause or stop the player while it loads - but you can see the progress as it loads. 6. Once it's finished loading, the progress bar will disappear, and you 82157476af
